

A Prayer For the Living

A Patriot is dead. A Patriot is dead and before he's even laid to rest his cause and that of his comrades is being second-guessed and put down by some in the alternative press. Why? Because the ranchers in Oregon "did not know what they were doing." Really? They did not know they were standing up against tyranny in the best way they knew how? They did not know their lives were on the line? If their strategy wasn't military-grade, their hearts were in the right place. As far as I can tell, the ranchers involved with the standoff conducted themselves in exemplary fashion; they did everything they could think of to open a meaningful dialog. Robert LaVoy Finicum died in that battle, a battle to crack open the "cone of silence" that our government and the mainstream media have erected around the American people, a dome that prevents America from hearing the Truth.

The cause of the ranchers out west is the same as the cause of the fishermen back east, the same as small farmers all across our nation, and the same as the average citizen who finds him or herself paying taxes on things he or she finds grotesque. Our government has gone renegade, desecrating the very law it's oath-sworn to uphold, trampling the unalienable Rights our forefathers fought so hard to secure. Why and how has this happened? That's the battle.

God Bless you Mr. Finicum. May the rest of the Patriot movement benefit from your brave sacrifice. This isn't about who is the smartest and best equipped to lead an armed standoff or uprising. It's about creating so much grass-roots attention that an armed rebellion will never be necessary. That's the objective. That means getting outside the electronic echo-chambers of Patriot blogs and the rigged social media. It means writing letters to small-town newspapers that have editors with a sympathetic ear. It means breaking into conversations with people who may be reluctant to listen. It means keeping the Faith with our forefathers' vision. No more compromise. Stand by and for the Constitution. It may not be possible to win back our Country with words, but that is the goal. Do not let LaVoy Finicum die in vain. Keep exposing the Truth! It "will set us Free."

God Bless us all,
A fellow Patriot
